Enamored by people in blacks on stage while in Early Learning

Joined technical theater upon entering high school where I encountered an almost even split of boys and girls with many girls in leadership roles

Comments honoring boys while work predominantly shouting out the male technicians

Noticing certain actors ignoring female technicians when they're closest to speak with male technicians about a problem furthering the stereotype of tech is for boys

Younger female technicians ignored while younger male technicians celebrated and asked many questions

Slow drop off of girls in tech with girls joining tech not making up for our lossed techies leading to great imbalance in tech for gender

Leadership rooms particularly male heavy ignoring the directors allowing the male presence to rise and have an impact on the room

Competed in tech challenge where one of the requirements is to have a girl on your team emphasizing the lack of diversity within technical theater while trying to provide greater access for all

My Capstone is focused on female representation in technical theater. I've created a mock design similar to what I'll eventually create. It'll be essentially the same thing - just a lot prettier, better laid out, and condensed timeline. This details my experiences in technical theater. I'm going to create a few more versions of this based on other Galloway students' experiences in technical theater so viewers can understand the female experience in technical theater. I'm also going to craft an artist's statement furthering my thoughts on what it means to be a woman in a male dominated industry, the strengths of the female technical theater community, and the impact technical theater has had on me.
